What is the best time to visit Delhi?

While October to March is the best time to visit Delhi because of cool weather. However, some weeks in late November to January should be avoided because of heavy smog cover. February and March have great weather and relatively clean air to travel outside. Delhi experiences extreme temperatures in summer and winter seasons. The summer months (April to July) are scorching hot in Delhi as the temperature might rise to 45 degree Celsius. Temperatures fall a little during the monsoon season (August to September) and certain days can be good for roaming around.

More about Best Time to Travel to Delhi

Delhi in Winter (December - March) ▾

December to March is the best time to visit Delhi as the weather remains pleasant and this is the time for various events and festivals. However, for a few weeks, sometimes extending to a month or more can be impossible to travel in Delhi because of smog, a thick cover of smoke and fog. This typically happens starts around mid-November and one of the primary causes for this has been cited as burning crops in the fields of nearby states. The smog is dangerous and it could become quite difficult to breathe and travelling during this period in Delhi is strictly not advised.

Irrespective of the weather in Delhi, Christmas and New year eve are celebrated in the city with great joy. The city comes alive with various shows and concerts. There are lots of places in Delhi to enjoy the nightlife and it's advisable to make your plans a little in advance as the places get booked quite soon.

February and March have relatively clean air and during these months, one can cover the various historical monuments and capture their cultural significance. You can visit the art museums and watch beautiful paintings, havelis and frescos. For nature lovers and photographers as well, this is the best time to visit as the season enhances the scenic beauty of the city. Therefore, for weather and cultural reasons, these months are the best time to visit Delhi.
